I Morth Protet Steer

That yeteran lawyer and statement, Box. Reverly Johnson, has, in compliance with the request of the ditor of the N. Y. Herald, written a letter aroun the Louisians, difficulty, which was published in the Herald of Thousay. Mr. Johnson considers the subject under three heads, vis:

1st. Was the President right, in the first instance, in recognizing Kailogg as the last material of the State?

Ind. If he was not, had the people any right to drive Kailogg from power, as they have done, by force of arms, and to take possession of the government?

3rd. Has the President a right to restore Kailogg and the government of which he was the head?

On the first head, he argues that the President committed an error in considering

On the first head, he argues that the President committed an error in considering Kellogg, as the legitimate governor, by reason of the judgment or decree pronounced by the United States District court. He concends that the question whether a State government has been legitimately established is not a judicial one, but a political one, and is to be adjudged by the political ope, and is to be adjudged by the political department of the government. He cites anthonities in support of this view.

On the second head, Mr. Johnson holds that having recognized Kellogg, whether upon sufficient evidence or not, that recognition was at once absolute and final. This view he maintains at length. But to our mind far-from ento-factority. If the President makes a mindule, there is no reason why he should not have the right to correct

On the third lead, he maintains that the President having recognized Kellogg, and the recognition never having licen reversed by Congress, his duty in the existing ouergency is to protect and rejustate that government as it was before the violence took place, if he can. We extract the closing paragraph.

paragraph. there said that the President is bound to restore the Keilogy government—if he can. But the government is not constituted of Keilogg alone. It is made up also of the Legislature, the judiciary, and of subordinate officers, appointed or elected. The most of these are reported either to have resigned or shelicated. If they refuse to return to their offices has the President to return to their offices has the President. bave resigned or shelicated. If they refuse to return to their offices has the President any power to force them to do so? If he has not, has he power to compel the election or sppointment of others? I think it clear that he has neither, and the effect of his doing what he can for the restoration of Kellogg as governor may leave the State without any other officer that a governor, or with a governor may leave the State without any other officer that a governor, or with a governor without a governor, or with a governor without a government. The difficulty, therefore, of the oresent situation in Louisiana may not be obviated by the course he is pursuing, or by any which he can constitutionally adopt. How it might certainly be met without further excitement or trouble is a question which would accume to me capable of a ready solution, and that is the one soggested in your note—the resignation of Kellogg and McKnery. But to make this effective exch of the licutemant governore should also resign. If they are governed by patriotic motives, and desire to restors tranquility to their State, they will not besitute to take such a step. That Kellogg can desire to retain a position which is so adverse to the feeling of the State, and which it is obvious he would not be able to hold a day without the aid of Vederal troops, some to use to be equally unpatriotic and dishenerable. But, upon such a question, the man—Kellogg—is the judge, and, as he may judge it, will he used with the applause or condemnation of the country.

We have given the points of Mr. Johnson's letter without questing his arguments and illustrations. There is name hair spliting in the letter, but we are ust disposed to enter upon an elaborate criticism of it. Mr. Johnson is an able juriseansult whose opinions presentialed to much seight.

Among the passengers who came into San Francisco on the Meannahly Japan were twenty-two Chinese women. All were young in years and prepassening in appearance. The Commissioners of Immigration became satisfied that it was their duty to inquire into their moral chineses, and for this furgiose they were taken from the steamer and brought to the Uity Hall. Pending the action of the Court, they were placed in the Mayor's office on the way out, spoke a few words to the woman, and lumgdiately an appear ensued, the like of which was never heard before, I seemed as if pandemonium had broken loose, or that some mad-house were giving a vocal entertainment. All the poor of reatures, with one accord, began to cry and moan in a pitiful manuel. Some threw themselves that the wall and rolled about in a perfect agony of despair. When the 'Yellow Maria' arrived, in which they were to be taken to the county joint, the scene increased in violence, Many of them had to be carried bodily, to the which they were to be laken to the county jail, the scene increased in violence. Many of them had to be carried bodily to the vehicle, while they rent the air with screams and shrill crying. The Chinaman who spoke to the women intimated that they were to be taken from that room to their death. They were to be hanged immediately, and the wall which they set mean in citiasioners. They halleved up was in consequence. They believed the man, and for a time experienced such agony as they would suffer. In the face of impending death. money manage of a control of the start

AN INCIDENT AT A HUMORISTS

A little incident connected with the funeral of Charles F. Browne, better known under his soon de plane of Arientus Ward, is related by Mr. Lawrence Barreit, the actor, who was one of the pall-bearus mpon that cession. Boy Browne, as everybody knows, died in London, in the majsts of his popularity as a humorous switer and lacturer, and his death created a probund sensation in literary circles, where his was universally beloved for his charming social qualities and the sparking britishacy of his with and humor. Bulver Lython once said that no other Asterioan of his sequaintance, had ever visited England whe possessed in such a marked degree the power of vinning the live and extens a literary circles when the genial humorist was stricken down by the lep hated of death, the chib-houses, whose sails had so often recounded with the merriment provided by his quaint sayings and sparking wittleions, were througed with groups of servoing friends and admirers, and when the key of the funeral arrived the most distinguished men of the day, including emissest authors, pools, artista, and actors, united in a lest mark they of the funeral arrived the most distinguished men of the day, including emissest authors, pools, artista, and actors, united in a lest mark of respect to his memory. As a part of the services at the grave an open-air discourie was derivered by an eminent divine, and it proved to be an exceedingly dry and elaborate affair, and when it was allower the tired mutilitade experiment in the form of the hand arrested the present of the passing strong and besought the people to listen to him for a moment. He said that he was from a little country town not far from London and that when he left home on the of the a movement of the hand arrested the pro-gress of the passing through and becought the people to listen to him fine a moment. He said that he was from a little country town not far from London, and that when he left home on the pervious day his old wife's last request was the tie purchase for her list.
